HOOVER BRANGH LIBRARY FEASIBILITY STUDY

TASK 2: RESEARCH + IMMERSION SUMMARY

INTRO

THE CHALLENGE

North Oakland Branch Library opened in 1888 and closed in 1981. After almost 100 years of service - without it, we have experienced

- Travel distances of greater than one mile to the closest branch library
- Reduced availability of social service resources and access to knowledge centers
- Elimination of children and elder development spaces
- Lack of safe spaces for residents

The challenge of the Feasibility Study is to align the opinions, definitions, and actions which will support the building of a new branch library based on community input.

ZONING HISTORY

1900's
At this time, residential districts were zoned "A-One-Family District'. West/ Northwest Oakland had three containment zones where African American residents were relegated. None were assigned the protective zoning description "A - One Family District".

All three containent zones permitted industrial uses surrounding and dispersed among residences.

1950's
'Urban Renewal' eroded the protective social adhesion provided by single-family home ownership with a preference for multi-unit leased housing.

Urban Renewal and Federal Highway construction effectively removed the foundation required to maintain existing small businesses which supported the community.

1970's
Zoning ordinances and other urban planning tools allowed the construction of 3 major highways decisively separating Hoover from Longfellow.

When the highway was constructed, two community libraries were removed.
